

This attempt to circumvent the screening process on consumer phones is an invasion of privacy. Privacy rights are core to individual rights in the United States. It's curious that supporters of this proposed action typically fall on the side of the rights of citizens, but only when it benefits business interests. Citizens should have the right to prevent solicitations. Individuals are people, not corporations. I firmly oppose this proposal by marketing technology companies.